APPLYING COMPASSION TO DIFFICULT SITUATIONS IN HEALTHCARE DELIVERY

Clinicians working with loss and grief are often defined by their compassionate nature, but sustaining that compassion begins with self-compassion.

Drawing on a growing body of evidence, Dr Darcy Harris explores compassion-based practices as a buffer against the fatigue and burnout that can be readily experienced when working with vulnerable individuals in clinical settings. Participants will leave with insights and key applied practices to cultivate compassion for themselves and those in their care.
